

Brief description and notes (economic contribution if provided)

The workshop, jointly organized with professors and students from ENSA Nantes, ENSA Paris-Malaquais (France), and the National Technical University of Crete (Greece) aims at reflecting on the relationship between tourism, territories, and architecture, by identifying the main issues related to developments, trends and changes of touristic settlements in the Mediterranean town of Karteros (Crete, Greece). In particular, the workshop is structured in three main parts. First, online lectures at Polimi will introduce the topic of tourism dynamics and structures in the Mediterranean region (with a specific focus on the Greek area), highlighting their multifaceted impacts on localities. The second part will be an on-site week (March 17th-March 21st 2025) focusing on an abandoned part of a holiday residential complex built in the modernistic period and the possible trajectories of reuse. Finally, after the on-site week there will be lectures and review meetings at Polimi (online and in person). The final outcome to be delivered will be a reuse project able to take into account the features of the local context.

Students will bear the costs of travel and subsistence for the on-site week in Karteros (Crete, Greece)
